

Review A

Read the passage carefully. Circle the eight incorrect words and write the correct words above them.

At the end of World War II, the world realised the horrors of fighting a war. An international organisation, the United Nations, was formed on the hopeful that it would prevent another war. The organisation could intervene in times of conflict, facilitate economy development and promote international law or security. Countries would have to abide with international laws or forgo trade with other countries. These trade sanctions, by themselves, would be one peace yet firm way of ensuring that countries would not threaten international security. In extreme situations, they would not receive international aid should there be prolonged hostile. The organisation assumed that the people's livelihood would be the most important for any govern, hence sanctions would be detrimental to the nation as a hole. Countries would then try to cooperate with the organisation.

Review A

At the end of World War II, the world realised the horrors of fighting a war. An international organisation, the United Nations, was formed in hope on the hopeful that it would prevent another war. The organisation could intervene in times of conflict, facilitate economic economy development and promote international law or security. Countries would have to abide by with international laws or forgo trade with other countries. These trade sanctions, by themselves, would be one peaceful peace yet firm way of ensuring that countries would not threaten international security.

In extreme situations, they would not receive international aid should there be hostility hostile. The organisation assumed that the people's livelihood would be the most important for any government govern, hence sanctions would be detrimental to the nation as a whole hole. Countries would then try to cooperate with the organisation.